Job Fair Tips

Get Prepared

Find a list of companies attending the job fair and get to work researching what they do and the type of people they hire. Create a list of thoughtful, insightful questions, craft an elevator pitch that's individualized to their needs, and create a few different versions of resumes for different types of positions.

Warm Up

- Job fair attendees each have their own method for deciding whom to speak to first, but a general rule is to build up to the companies at the top of your list by speaking to other recruiters first.
- Allowing yourself to dispel any nerves and settle in to the process will help boost confidence levels when it comes time to speak to the company you're most interested in.

Strike up a Conversation

- In addition to meeting with recruiting managers and other employees of the company, it's worthwhile to talk to other attendees while standing in line to get a sense of who they've seen and what their initial impressions are. You may get some candid insight into the participating companies.
- This step can also help you avoid companies that may not offer what you're looking for, which could save you some valuable time as you navigate the event.

Be Ready to Talk

Lots of companies use job fairs as an opportunity to conduct short interviews, so be prepared to be asked questions and to ask your own. Hiring managers love starting with the seemingly innocuous "Tell me about yourself" line, which can often trip up job seekers with its vagueness. Be sure to practice this question and others before the day of the event.

- Perfecting a succinct, easily conveyable "elevator pitch" is your first chance to impress recruiters and convince them to extend an interview.
- Exude confidence when approaching the table by maintaining eye contact, offering a firm handshake, and ensuring body language is open and professional.

Dress for Success

As with other job interviews, recruiters expect job seekers attending job fairs to dress for the job they hope to have.

- The most widely accepted style of dress for these occasions is business casual.
- Job seekers should also ensure they have a pair of professional-looking shoes and a briefcase or satchel.

Bring a Few Key Items

Most hiring managers suggest bringing the following:

- At least 10 copies of your resume
- Letters of recommendation and copies
- A list of references
- Other supporting documentation as required for your field (copies of certifications, etc.)

Know What Not to Bring

- Refrain from bringing any food or drinks (aside from water) into the career fair.
- While it's okay to walk to the fair with friends, it's best not to bring them with you to individual tables. Recruiters want the opportunity to speak to candidates one-on-one rather than in groups.

Follow Up

Once the fair is over and the recruiters have packed their materials, plan to check in via email or regular mail to thank them for their time and remind them of the interaction and some of your key qualifications. While it's not required, job seekers who take the extra time to do this step will instantly rise above the competition.
